SUITS

Oxford Clothes

IF YOUR PERCEPTION of Oxford Clothes involves images of grandfatherly types in beautifully tailored yet old-fashioned suits, it is time to revisit the nonagenarian Chicago brand. Mike Cohen, Oxford's 41-year-old chief executive, has ushered in feathery super-wool and cashmere fabrics, lighter constructions, and a more modern, streamlined model called the Mason, which features thinner lapels, higher armholes, and lean, flat-front slacks. Oxford's completely hand-sewn suits incorporate the lightest of horsehair canvas inner linings and sleeves that are attached with a distinctive chain-link stitch, instead of with the stiff, unyielding tape that many suitmakers prefer.
